SPANDREL – May 2014 Urban identities and emerging city forms

About the Issue

The physical forms and cultural contours of cities are embedded in their past histories. But urban identity is not only an expression of time, but also a function of buildings, culture(s), communities, natural features and collective memories. Religion, tradition, spatial types, built forms and climatic responsiveness situate the contemporary city within its globalised multi-dimensional identities, which are only going to keep multiplying. The seminal question of identity would take on numerous aspects of how such pluralisms would be interpreted, created and recreated, used and abused, imagined and narrated, suppressed and communicated, expressed and projected, imposed and marketed. Above all, the multiple ways they are going to be perceived within the dynamic interpolation of the East and the West, the centre and the periphery, the urban and the suburban and the old and the new.

With the backdrop of these multi-layered research themes and ever-emerging areas of study on urban identities and form, the May 2014 issue of SPANDREL aims at adopting a wide-lens inter-disciplinary approach, while focusing on various transitional processes affecting identities in the urban context in its global-regional-national-local interplay. The issue welcomes contributions in the form of research papers, case studies, documentations, students' works and book reviews which would enrich the knowledge base on the subject.

Contributions are welcome on the following thematic areas (but are not limited to):

1. Collective memory, identity and urban image construction
2. Cultural identity of cities
3. Migration, emerging urban forms and imagery
4. City marketing and city branding in transition
5. Urban heritage as identity-anchor
6. Creative Changes of the cities
7. Art and industry in urban development
8. Urban aesthetics
9. Kitsch and value in shaping contemporary urban spaces
10. Post-colonialism and the nature of urban change
11. East-West connects in urban development
12. Media and the city
